

Catchy Introduction

7-Eleven is the most recognizable convenience store brand, dominating almost every street corner. However, with the emergence of multiple new and trendy stores, is there a growing concern that 7-Eleven has become complacent by focusing only on the fundamentals?

Valid Justification

- Lacks a contemporary store layout and product range, which places its facilities old-fashioned next to modern competitors, such as FamilyMart.
- Severed ties with customers in younger demographics who prefer the excitement and uniquely positioned offerings of competitors.
- Foot traffic is decreasing as there is little to no reason to patronize 7-Eleven in comparison to recently introduced competitors.
- Difficulty in retaining existing clientele as there is a surplus of modern choices in product offerings, both in-store and online.

Catchy Introduction

CU entered the market riding the Korean wave, promising convenience and high-quality fresh, fast food. However, internal assessments indicate a critical operational failure. Customers encounter empty shelves or expired inventory. The company's core value proposition of convenience is fundamentally undermined.

Valid Justification

- current static ordering system forces franchisees to guess how much food to order which leads to costly dual failure of excess food waste and significant lost sales from stockouts
- Inconsistent product availability and varying food quality across outlets damage the CU brand promise
- A lack of reliability reduces customer loyalty and impacts long-term market share

Call to Action

It is recommended to have the immediate approval and funding to pilot the 'Fresh-Predict' AI forecasting system to eliminate waste, secure inventory consistency, and maximize franchisee profitability.

Call to Action

In order to re-establish its position, 7-Eleven has to make some updates and improvements to its business model. Offering modernization strategies and new collaborations with well-known local restaurants under the "7-Eleven Refresh" program can achieve the goal of changing 7-Eleven from a mere convenience stop to a daily stop.

Catchy Introduction

"MyNews, Malaysia's homegrown convenience store, stands tall among international competitors. But as the retail landscape evolves, can MyNews keep up with changing consumer habits and expectations?"

Anisa Chowdhury
MyNews

Valid Justification

- Overreliance on traditional convenience formats, while consumer trends shift toward experiential and tech-integrated shopping.
- Limited digital engagement online (ordering, app rewards etc.) compared to global competitors, resulting in weaker customer retention.
- Inconsistent outlet experience across cities and suburbs impacts brand reputation and customer loyalty.
- Rising competition from other convenience stores increases the need for upgrade.

Call to Action

MyNews should invest in smart digital ecosystems that include data-driven loyalty programs, regional product innovation, and enhanced in-store technology. MyNews can restore its position as the go-to local convenience brand for the next generation by embracing modernization while remaining true to its Malaysian origins.

Catchy Introduction

"FamilyMart, where Japanese and Korean culture meets Malaysian cravings. But are those cravings truly being met?"

Valid Justification

- Frequent stock shortages of popular items in certain locations.
- Lack of local flavour adaptation, making it less appealing to some Malaysians.
- Inconsistent stock availability and limited local product adaptation across outlets.
- Leads to customer disappointment and disconnect with local cultural preferences.

Call to Action

- Improve inventory management with a smart system
- Introduce localized/festival-based products
- Track high-demand products in real time & collaborate with local companies
